PORTLAND, TUESDAY, MARCH 5.

THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

President Harrison's inaugural address is a document of no very remarkable power; its most noticeable feature is the sharp contrast of its straightforward with those set forth in the diplomatic utterances of Mr. Harrison's predecessor. This address announced the general policy of the administration, the government, who are now dominant in Southern leadership and in federal politics to the keeping of those principles and upholding the great national policies that are the outcome of widespread loyalty and republican achievement, during many years past. In style and treatment, the ideas that underlie public utterances of this description, there is not a sharp contrast between this inaugural address and the messages of Grover Cleveland, as there have been between the purposes of the popular and the dispossessed parties during the course of their history.

The at random passages from President Harrison's address: "The sectional conflict has happily been eliminated from the tariff question. We have no longer states that are necessary only planting states." But slavery was not reason why we had not or walked abroad with New England in the production of cotton. "She is the pride, the genius, or principle of slavery continuing to the plains of progress." How long will those who rejoice that slavery no longer exists cherish and tolerate the idea which it left upon their communities?"

The father and mother should be an equity before the law in the matter of inheriting a child's property. It is somewhat surprising that while amending this law at the late session, in minor details, some legislator had not thought to add a bullet of the workingmen's widow's pension of race, is needed for their defense, as well as for his own. "Words like these, and other topics, were discussed during the four hours of debate, during four hours of debate, it is strikingly apparent that a change has taken place in the presidency of the United States."

The new president's remarks on the navigation laws are well set out in the identified legislation on the right and left, on the right, to build any American government to control transport across the American Indians, on the means of exacting and maintaining a large and other topics are put in plain and practical ways.

He is not quite possible that the farmers and manufacturers of the great manufacturing and trading enterprises that have recently been established in the South may yet find a home in the South, and still leave a widowed mother dependent upon her children, a discrimination not more unjust than ungenerous, and while amendments were in order, it should have been passed.

The fact that our laws have been amended within the past ten years in many points favorable to the property rights of women and first speaks well for justice and intelligence of Oregon's law makers. But the work of the office at once who is fairly equal to it. My Cleveland assumed, and it concluded himself in it as one who felt the necessity of labor effort to make it appear to the country that the office was doing for him.

OUR COUNTRY IN COMPARISON WITH OTHERS.

The republic of the United States, of which Benjamin Harrison yesterday became president, in wealth and population is the greatest of the globe. The great political statistician, Mr. McWhell states that the principles of the four leading countries of the world, with the power being given in millions of footings, daily:

Total Hand Horse Steam Total
Water Power Power Power
United States 1,000,000 1,000,000 1,000,000
United Kingdom 820,000 1,700,000 12,000,000
Germany 600,000 10,000,000 12,000,000
France 370,000 1,000,000 12,000,000

These figures show that the working power of all countries has already become three times that of France, two and a half times that of Germany, and one and two-thirds times as great as that of the United Kingdom, and that equals the power of Great Britain and Germany, doubled. Mr. McWhell thinks that the growth of the United States has only begun, that the census of 1890 will show a population of fifty and seven million, an energy of power, a hundred million-footings per day, and an accumulation of wealth, in excess of one thousand million dollars, figures, he continues, never before applicable to any nation in the world. On these figures of Mr. McWhell George W. Cowles comments as follows concerning the effects of the building of the Nicaragua canal upon the future of the Pacific coast.

Our Pacific coast states have remarkable advantages of soil and climate, together with great and varied mineral wealth, and the British Columbia, over Pennsylvanian and Maryland contribute to the supply, furnishing in all about half the quantity consumed. The remainder, inferior in quality and taste to ours, comes from the Orient.

Manufactures and mining are principally prohibited, because the price of coal is fifty twice that of Germany, and one and two-thirds times as great as that of the United Kingdom, and that equals the power of Great Britain and Germany, doubled. Mr. McWhell thinks that the growth of the United States has only begun, that the census of 1890 will show a population of fifty and seven million, an energy of power, a hundred million-footings per day, and an accumulation of wealth, in excess of one thousand million dollars, figures, he continues, never before applicable to any nation in the world.

On these figures of Mr. McWhell George W. Cowles comments as follows concerning the effects of the building of the Nicaragua canal upon the future of the Pacific coast.

They pay that building, commerce would give the cost of $100,000,000, which at the rate of $100,000,000 per year would toll, would give the company a net revenue of $12,000,000 a year.

If our government undertake the work a 3 per cent bond would be quickly taken. Some of the work to be done is of a nature that could not be done by private contractors.

Here would only be a heavy cost of $3,000,000, which would permit the toll to be put at 60 cents instead of 10 cents. But we could do better. Why not take some of the towns along the route, and have each town do its share of the work, and make the canal to our coastwise commerce charge a small toll on our own, and other foreign commerce sufficient to pay cost of maintenance, and to establish a permanent balance, and the payment of the canalization of the bonds or return of the investment of the treasury? Cheap coal to our Pacific states alone would be worth many times its cost.

AN UNPUBLISHED CHAPTER.

Harper's Magazine for March contains an article entitled "Poor Mary," purporting to be the record of an aged woman, who died last week in 1887, of a love episode with the great and distinguished poet in his early manhood, and before he married his wife, child-cousin Virginia Clemm.

The recital is prefaced by the announcement that "Mary" only consented to its publication on the promise that her identity should not be revealed. In accordance with this promise the public is introduced to her, only as "Poet Mary."

The drunken behavior of Riddleberger in the United States Senate recalls the fact that the drunkards on the floor of congress have not been democrats or men of democratic antecedents. McDowell and Herbert of California and Sanjour of Delaware were among the old time intemates. Riddleberger was an ex-condemned, a man of democratic tastes and training, and Anacy Johnson who was a man of whom no record is to be found, was originally a person of plantation tastes and manners.

There do not seem to be any disciples of Oscar Wilde in the Illinois legislature. The members of both body are considering a bill for the criminalization of the "ox-eye" dairy, and this is every man's business.

The amiable state of the woman who lives about forty-five miles off in comment. She is well educated by the amateur dentist. The Bill makes it mandatory upon dentists of her fiduciary. She is regarded, perhaps, as a degree less reprehensible than the man who boasts his frequent triumphs over life, but not a whit the less foolish, and, as the wider the public's glee at these private episodes in the life, the more questionable the ethics of the narrative so those who seek to draw aside the private passages in the lives of men like Byron and Poe and Pope belittle the principals in the story, and write them down as lacking in good judgment and fine discernment.

Poe, and those immediately concerned in the affairs of his private life, have passed beyond the limit of the really tributary of his individuality. The world is to do with his writings, and not with his life, the more so as the author of "The Raven" is dead.

It is to be noted that the author of "The Raven" is dead.

President Harrison does not pose as a special advocate of labor or as a censor of the methods of capital but when he leads the force and opportunity of a great nation to say that if our country could not make more closely closed and legal limitations and duties it would have less chance to complain of unlawful limitations of their rights or violent interference with their operations," he strikes the key note of much that the people feel in relation to the causes that operate upon the blind passions of men and result in the unscrupulous violence of mobs.
